

OPEN SPACE AND RECREATION

Open space and outdoor recreation have many benefits for both people and the environment. Research has shown that increased access to open space can help improve both mental and physical health, and increased green space and tree canopy can help the city's natural resources by reducing the urban heat island effect and helping manage storm water runoff. Boston has a long history of prioritizing open space, with the Boston Common being the country's oldest public park. Residents enjoy hundreds of neighborhood parks, playgrounds, courts, fields, trails and urban wilds that provide open space and recreation opportunities.
